New Directions Based On Your Feedback

Between the growing momentum behind the Climate Crisis movement and the International Climate Summit, May 2009, will the moral case to act on climate change be made clear? Our colleagues at the Environmental Voter Project have new data out this year, which could do much to further broaden the conversation on the need for action. Our goal for 2020 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency.

You also told us you are interested in the following ways to address climate change:

1. Publicly declare the moral responsibility to act on climate change
2. Include climate change in religious education
3. Training on how to advocate for laws and policies to address climate change
4. Energy efficiency upgrades at your house of worship
5. Encourage congregation members to lower their home energy use and carbon footprint
6. Provide guidance on energy efficiency and renewables

And you told us that we could be most helpful to you in:

1. Start a faith-based community organizing group
2. Start a faith-based advocacy group
3. Start a faith-based education program
4. Start a faith-based energy efficiency program

Stay tuned for coming news about new ways we will offer guidance on energy efficiency and connections to other congregations. Please contact us if you are interested in guest preachers and speakers — a number of other congregations have joined us to share their experience.

Executive Committee worked during the fall on how to revise, expand, and integrate our offerings to be more inclusive, to have faith-based organizers, and to reach out to new faith communities. We invite you to join us at the January 2020 meeting. How can we help you or your congregation? We’d also like to add your voice to the survey results, click here.

Between the growing momentum behind the Climate Crisis movement and the International Climate Summit, May 2009, will the moral case to act on climate change be made clear? Our colleagues at the Environmental Voter Project have new data out this year, which could do much to further broaden the conversation on the need for action. Our goal for 2020 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency.

You also told us you are interested in the following ways to address climate change:

1. Publicly declare the moral responsibility to act on climate change
2. Include climate change in religious education
3. Training on how to advocate for laws and policies to address climate change
4. Energy efficiency upgrades at your house of worship
5. Encourage congregation members to lower their home energy use and carbon footprint
6. Provide guidance on energy efficiency and renewables

And you told us that we could be most helpful to you in:

1. Start a faith-based community organizing group
2. Start a faith-based advocacy group
3. Start a faith-based education program
4. Start a faith-based energy efficiency program

Stay tuned for coming news about new ways we will offer guidance on energy efficiency and connections to other congregations. Please contact us if you are interested in guest preachers and speakers — a number of other congregations have joined us to share their experience.

Executive Committee worked during the fall on how to revise, expand, and integrate our offerings to be more inclusive, to have faith-based organizers, and to reach out to new faith communities. We invite you to join us at the January 2020 meeting. How can we help you or your congregation? We’d also like to add your voice to the survey results, click here.

Between the growing momentum behind the Climate Crisis movement and the International Climate Summit, May 2009, will the moral case to act on climate change be made clear? Our colleagues at the Environmental Voter Project have new data out this year, which could do much to further broaden the conversation on the need for action. Our goal for 2020 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency.

You also told us you are interested in the following ways to address climate change:

1. Publicly declare the moral responsibility to act on climate change
2. Include climate change in religious education
3. Training on how to advocate for laws and policies to address climate change
4. Energy efficiency upgrades at your house of worship
5. Encourage congregation members to lower their home energy use and carbon footprint
6. Provide guidance on energy efficiency and renewables

And you told us that we could be most helpful to you in:

1. Start a faith-based community organizing group
2. Start a faith-based advocacy group
3. Start a faith-based education program
4. Start a faith-based energy efficiency program

Stay tuned for coming news about new ways we will offer guidance on energy efficiency and connections to other congregations. Please contact us if you are interested in guest preachers and speakers — a number of other congregations have joined us to share their experience.

Executive Committee worked during the fall on how to revise, expand, and integrate our offerings to be more inclusive, to have faith-based organizers, and to reach out to new faith communities. We invite you to join us at the January 2020 meeting. How can we help you or your congregation? We’d also like to add your voice to the survey results, click here.

Between the growing momentum behind the Climate Crisis movement and the International Climate Summit, May 2009, will the moral case to act on climate change be made clear? Our colleagues at the Environmental Voter Project have new data out this year, which could do much to further broaden the conversation on the need for action. Our goal for 2020 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency. Our goal for 2019 is to provide this message of the climate emergency.

You also told us you are interested in the following ways to address climate change:

1. Publicly declare the moral responsibility to act on climate change
2. Include climate change in religious education
3. Training on how to advocate for laws and policies to address climate change
4. Energy efficiency upgrades at your house of worship
5. Encourage congregation members to lower their home energy use and carbon footprint
6. Provide guidance on energy efficiency and renewables

And you told us that we could be most helpful to you in:

1. Start a faith-based community organizing group
2. Start a faith-based advocacy group
3. Start a faith-based education program
4. Start a faith-based energy efficiency program

Stay tuned for coming news about new ways we will offer guidance on energy efficiency and connections to other congregations. Please contact us if you are interested in guest preachers and speakers — a number of other congregations have joined us to share their experience.

Executive Committee worked during the fall on how to revise, expand, and integrate our offerings to be more inclusive, to have faith-based organizers, and to reach out to new faith communities. We invite you to join us at the January 2020 meeting. How can we help you or your congregation? We’d also like to add your voice to the survey results, click here.